GENERAL DESCRIPTION: The international Criminal Court is neither the beginning nor the end of attempts by the international community to regulate the conduct of belligerents and obtain international justice. This course will examine the concept of international justice as it relates to the crime of genocide specifically and war crimes generally. The concepts and procedures with which international tribunals wrestle today are the result of centuries of thought and action and form the basis of institutional activities which will attempt to regulate the worst of human behavior in the future.

The Nuremberg Trials and Their legacy for the International Legal Community.

Dr. Richard M. O’Meara

The Nuremberg trials of 1945-1949 including the Trial of Major War Criminals and the subsequent twelve Trials of War Criminals before the Nuremberg Military Tribunal (IMT) have been lauded as a remarkable set of legal events which continue to resonate as the International community struggles with the task of setting procedural and substantive standards for the articulation, institutionalization and enforcement of international legal principles regarding the arbitrary use of force on a mass scale. Not without their faults, these trials continue to be recognized as the base-line from which international criminal courts, ethical principles at the bar and in the medical community, and enforcement regimes have been implemented. This course examines the trials themselves and evaluates their goals, successes and failures. It further looks at the myriad legal challenges which these trials have informed including the international tribunals which have been formed in their wake. Finally, it assesses the strengths and weaknesses of the International Criminal Court, the IMT’s successor institution.
Professor Richard O’Meara is an international lawyer and trial attorney with a PhD in Global Affairs from Rutgers University. He is also a retired Brigadier General, USA, who spent a career in the Infantry and the Judge Advocate General’s Corps where he trained soldiers to conduct war crimes investigations and taught rule of law and international justice issues to civilian and military constituents in such diverse locations as Moldova, Ukraine, Slovenia, Bosnia, Chad, Rwanda, Guiana, Sierra Leone, the Philippines, Thailand, Cambodia, Peru, Panama, El Salvador, Honduras, and Iraq.

COURSE SYNOPSIS
This course examines American security policy as it relates to Sub-Saharan Africa since the end of the Cold War and especially since the advent of the War on Terrorism. Particular attention is paid to the American security apparatus which has evolved in order to respond to divergent policy initiatives including security, resource development, failed-state maintenance, and globalization.

Standard texts will provide students with a general history of the African continent and contemporary issues. Required texts: and Kevin Shillington’s HISTORY OF AFRICA. NY: St. Martin’s, 1996. And Dambisa Moyo, DEAD AID. United State policy considerations will be reviewed in a series of articles provided by the Professor.

Students are required to review and summarize assigned readings; prepare a regional study for presentation to the class; and take a final examination.

Dr. O’Meara has received appointments in the History and Political Science Departments of a number of universities including Kean University and Monmouth University, where he has taught security and foreign policy courses. He presently teaches in the Division of Global Affairs at Rutgers University and in the Holocaust and Genocide Studies Program at Richard Stockton College where he examines issues of ethnic violence and international law. He has also served as a Resident Fellow, Stockdale Center for Ethical Leadership, United States Naval Academy. He holds a PhD from Rutgers University in Global Affairs, a Juris Doctorate from Fordham University and MA’s in History and International Relations. He is also a graduate of the United States Army War College, the Army Command and General Staff College and various courses in Peace-keeping at the United Nations. He has worked in the Department of Defense in various capacities including Assistant to the Army General Counsel and as a Brigadier General in the U.S. Army Judge Advocate General’s Corps. He also serves as Adjunct Faculty to the Defense Institute for International Legal Studies and has traveled in that capacity to such diverse locations as Chad, Rwanda, Kenya, Guinea, Sierra Leone, Ukraine, Vietnam, Moldova, Israel, Slovenia, Bosnia, Thailand, the Philippines, Panama, Honduras, Peru, El Salvador, and Iraq where he consulted with the Iraqi Commission on Public Integrity regarding investigative techniques and integrity systems management.
